TONY BUTLER:
A NOVEL.
Bro., Cloth, $1 50; Paper, 61.

From The London Times.

The sketches of the life of Government officials are among the most pleasant chapters in these pleasant volumes.... It is the product of a full, active mind, and ought to please both those who read for mere excitement, and those who like to think while they read.

From The London Standard.

No Novel of the season has given us so much genuine pleasure, and we can, with safety, predict that every reader will be delighted with it. Skew, Damer, and Tony, and Count MacCaskill will live in the memory for many a day.

From The London Reader.

A Novel, exciting and spirited in many passages, and readable throughout.... The author has the power of bringing a real man before us.

From The Saturday Review.

One of the best drawn characters in the book is the hero, Tony Butler.... Rebecca Graham is one of the best Irish girls that recent story-writers have given us, and she impresses her flirtations with an amount of humor, frankness and fitness to which English women rarely attain.

From The Athenaeum.

From first to last the reader is reminded of "Harry Lorrequer" and "The Cartons" of "Charles O'Malley" and "My Novel". The writer uses a ready pen, and shows that he is no novice in the literary craft.

DR. HOOKER'S MINERALOGY AND GEOLOGY.

SCIENCE FOR THE SCHOOL AND FAMILY. PART III—MINERALOGY AND GEOLOGY. By WORTHINGTON HOOKER, M. D., Professor of Medicine in Yale College, Author of "The Child's Book of Nature," "Natural History," "A First Book in Chemistry," and Text Books on Natural Philosophy and Chemistry, being Parts I and II, of "Science for the School and Family." With nearly 300 Engravings.

12mo, Half Leather, $1 50.

From The American Journal of Education.

It is related of a mechanic who was performing a difficult work by candle-light that he said to his attendant, "Hold the light so that you can see, yourself, and you may be sure that I can see."

The rule here enjoined—mutatis mutandis—is applicable to the writers of books; and we know no writer who more fully exemplifies this rule than Dr. Hooker. He writes on subjects which he understands, and so "holds the light by which he sees" that his readers can see also. His style is simple, direct and lucid. Having clear thoughts to communicate, his sole endeavor seems to be—it should be—to make them intelligible to the reader. Whatever we have read from his pen is marked with these characteristics. Perhaps the habit of reducing his thoughts to the simplest form of expression is the result of his experience as a teacher, in which there is often a saving of one's powers to the utmost to convey a thought clearly to the mind of a pupil. The faithful and benevolent teacher learns in this way, properly to appreciate the attitudes of other minds and the difficulties of being understood by them. But however acquired, our author certainly possesses, in a remarkable degree, the power and the habit of addressing his thoughts in an intelligible manner to the minds of others. He is thus admirably fitted to write books for the young and for schools.

From The Congregationalist (Boston).

We like Dr. Hooker's works, and do not wonder that they are popular. While scientific, they are not dry, but attractive, and admirably adapted to secure the reader's attention.
